

Contents

Number 164 | Sept/Oct 2020

- 3 Focus on... Critical thinking in science
- 4 Notice Board
- 5 An interview with Professor Sir John Holman
Leigh Hoath, editor of Primary Science, speaks with the ASE President about his journey through science learning and teaching
- 7 The science says ...
Rachel Linfield and Debbie Nabb outline what this means through the questions asked by a 10-year-old boy about science-based decisions
- 8 Pupils solving environmental problems: a landslide example from Thailand
Tawinan Saengkhattiya, a doctoral researcher, discusses how a topic of national concern is used as a stimulus for teaching and learning
- 12 Science under COVID-19 restrictions: making the impossible possible!
Berry Billingsley discusses the optimistic hope of 22 hours of scientific enquiry by Christmas – Impossible? Unreasonable? Maybe not!
- 17 Science Swap Shop
Martin Wesley presents some practical techniques tips
- 21 Observations and opinions of a primary science lead who made the move to early years
Christine Rushworth reflects on the teaching of science from reception across the year groups
- 25 Using What might happen? demonstrations for science inquiry
David and Valerie Keenahan outline how effective inquiry-based science can take place using inexpensive accessible resources
- 28 Teaching science enquiry in the new 'normal'
Sherralyn Simpson and Caroline Thomas offer ideas around how science can be taught well under challenging circumstances
- 31 Reach for the stars!
Emma Vanstone outlines a resource for approaching teaching primary science with a focus on working scientifically
- 35 Reviews

Cover: Learning from teaching the early years – page 21

Primary Science

Editor Dr Leigh Hoath

Interview with Sir John Holman – page 5

Understanding what 'The science says..' means – page 7

Modelling landslides in Thailand – page 8

Reach for the stars! – page 31

Executive Editor Helen Johnson

ASE editorial contact Jane Harrott

Design/page makeup Colin Barker nnd

Advertising Rebecca Dixon-Watmough

The Association for Science Education